CRIMES IN OLD INNS.

OLD WORLD OUT OF THE WAY TRAPS FOR UNWARY TRAVELERS.

An Experience in an Inn on the Spanish Frontier—Resorts in Rural France Where Theft and Murder and Worse Awaited the Victims.

From a worldwide traveler come these stories of evil ruins abroad, of dark nights, evil companions and loneliness. He says:

"I sometimes think of a night I spent in an inn on the Spanish frontier, in a little seaside village surrounded by a thick pine forest. I was accommodated with a bed in a large room in which another traveler was lying. He was talkative, as most southern Frenchmen are, and curious as to my business, circumstances and future movements. I told him a story of my financial troubles which seemed to me to have saved my life. He was restless during the night and kept going to the window. I could not go to sleep while he was moving about.

"In the end we both fell asleep. He had given me his name, a name with which a year or two later the whole of France was ringing. He was tried for a double murder, perpetrated under circumstances of peculiar atrocity, and with such a motive of petty robbery that the opinion was he must have had long familiarity with crime. The murder for which he was convicted was carried out to gain possession of £20, and people believed none but a hardened criminal would nerve himself to murder for gain so paltry.

"Such was my companion in a lonely inn, where my disappearance would have aroused neither curiosity nor suspicion. How he would have disposed of me I could imagine from the crime for which he was convicted. He traveled with a large trunk. I sometimes think it was the one afterward seized at the cloakroom of a station on the Cherbourg line containing the body of his first victim. I think all that saved me from a similar fate was the cunning with which I had concealed the fact I was in possession that night of a considerable sum.

"It was with similar cunning that my brother and myself avoided a like danger at Rotterdam. We were lads of ten and twelve respectively, on our way home to England from our school in Wiesbaden. As the ship did not start until the day following our arrival, we had been obliged to pass the night in Rotterdam. A loafer conducted us to a miserable tavern in a slum off the Bompjes, where we paid for the best room.

"As the time for retiring came our villainous looking landlord conducted us to a dark closet and told us to sleep there. 'We have fallen into a trap,' I said to my brother, and so it seemed when later we heard a stealthy step on the staircase. Then we began to talk in German, and the gist of our conversation was: What would become of us the next day if the money expected from our parents did not arrive? We colored the story of distress, and probably our being awake saved us instead of the tale overheard. We heard the step retreating, and remaining awake till morning, we were not molested.

"From what I have since heard of this class of house in Rotterdam and Amsterdam I have no doubt that we had a narrow escape.

France, too, is dotted with houses where murder and theft lurk behind the mask of treachery. In the forest of Chateaux, three miles from Macon, you may see the ruins of a church consecrated to St. John. 'Not far from this,' writes Raoul Glabert, 'a scoundrel had built a house for the accommodation of travelers. In this house he murdered all who came to lodge. The monster used the flesh of his victims for nourishment.

"A man came there with his wife and asked shelter. Having rested, his wife, prying into a closet, discovered a heap of human remains. At this the travelers grew pale and made for the road. The innkeeper tried to stop them, but terror lent speed, so they were able to escape to the town, where they informed Prince Othon of the discovery. A great number of men set out, the monster was found in his den, and no less than forty-eight human heads were discovered, remains of travelers whom he had murdered and devoured. He was dragged back to town, tied to a beam in a cellar and burned to death.

"I myself," says Glabert, "was present at his execution."

From other chronicles of this period cannibalism seems to have been looked upon by innkeepers as a prerequisite of their profession. This story is in its way more horrible than Hamilton Aide's fiction, for in his evil inn only the teeth and suffering of the victims were covered by the two sisters of Cologne. The French inn of most sinister reputation is still standing in a mountain pass in Auvergne. This is known to history as the Murderers' Inn. The inn is a death trap. Rooms assigned to travelers have windows barred with iron. In an outthrust is the furnace in which bodies of victims were disposed of. Hundreds of lonely travelers, belated in this inaccessible spot, have been plundered and murdered—Philadelphia North American.

Remarkable Cure.

"I was much affected with sciatica," writes Ed. C. Nud, Iowa, Sedgwick, Co. Kan., "going about on crutches and suffering a great deal of pain. I was induced to try Ballard's Snow Liniment, which relieved me. I used three 50c bottles. It is the greatest liniment I ever used; have recommended it to a number of persons; all express themselves as being benefited by it. I now walk without crutches, able to perform a great deal of light labor on the farm." 25c, 50c and $1.00. Sold by all druggists.

FLOMATON

Special to The Journal.

Flomaton, Dec. 21.—Flomaton is in tears—"It rains and the wind is never weary." The sun hides his face and the troubled waters cover the dreary earth. The sad old year is going out, laden with sin, broken resolutions and hopes deferred, that maketh sick. With regret we hear that Mr. Will Powell, one of our best merchants is ill with typhoid fever.

An accident at Camp 11 if good for nothing else, serves as a valiant hint to careless housekeepers. Some 18 men were luxuriating in cheese sauce served from a caged tin, or zinc can. Of course they were badly poisoned and but for the expedition used in sending a train for a physician, the affair would have been recorded among the tragedies.

Miss Anna Drury of Flomaton with chaperone and escort was joined by Mr. and Mrs. G. Guest and others from Pine Bluff who went down to Pensacola to the Clansman.

Mr. Martin Porter, made glad many of his warm friends, by a pop call last Monday.

Mr. Cook state superintendent of public schools visited No. 50 public school, presided over by Miss Isabelle McCurdy, of Flomaton. The Baptist and Methodist Sunday Schools and Subam Society will celebrate Christmas at their respective churches. Dr. Riley McCurdy will visit Mobile to-morrow in behalf of Santa Claus—Peace on earth good will to man goes out with our best benedictions.
